GILLILAND REBUILDS

Auto Motor Blocks

The Sentinel, May 27, 1966

A romance with a motor block, you might say.

This is a story about a Rochester man whose romance with motor blocks, and what makes them tick, began in the early 1920s with the rebuilding of a "Fronty."

Geiger, better known as "Gig" Gilliland, 61, then was a high school sophomore who wanted to "soup up" an old Frontenac auto block, so he could perhaps one day race it, or have it raced, at the Indianapolis Speedway.

That meant changing his thinking from just play work to real honest work. He had his start at his father's garage on the rear of the lot at Seventh and Madisonj streets, adjacent to the present City Hall.

He was successful in getting the "Fronty" to work. That brought inquiries from local and far-away Model T owners to rebuild Ford-manufactured motor blocks. This included reshaping by grinding the crankshaft, welding and babbing rocker arms, cylinders, reboring motor blocks and many other necessary components of the motors of those days, 1925-1940.

Meanwhile, "Gig's" knowledge and know-how spread, first within the immediate area, then statewide, then throughout the midwest. Today his rebuilt motors are operating in every state in the nation, almost all Canadian provinces and in many Mexican states.

Gilliland craftsmanship, starting in 1924, has improved through the years. "Gig" now has eight employees, all master mechanics, and all taught by him. When he began his Model T motor rebuilding, which was a specialty then as now, a good year would bring in $2,500, Today that specialty has grown to a $3,000-plus per week business.

This does not include his auto parts business, which is a separate operation as he hastens to advise his callers.

In the good old days, says "Gig," a good mechanic was worth 25 cents an hour, and a cracker-jack could make 50 cents an hour. Today his least paid specialist-mechanic is an apprentice at $3 an hour.

The Sentinel spent an hour with "Gig" as he proudly moved about his immaculate shop, caressing the machinery as if it were fragile in its molded metal, somewhat like a gardener with his prized rose bushes in bloom. He permitted us to quote his estimate of equipment at slightly more than $100,000 and doubted if it could be replaced for near that amount.

Had he ever been offered a price for his business?

No. A few years ago he thought of selling and hinted around he would like to travel and visit auto museums in every nook and cranny of North America. When he put a price of $100,000 on his rebuilding business there were no takers. Is he glad he didn't sell?

Yes, Gig said he wanted to keep his romance going in a lifetime business that had been so fascinating.

One piece of equipment, a huge crankshaft grinder, cost $17,000. Others include an electric welder at $6,000, a surface grinder worth $8,000 that takes care of generators, altometers and starters, and so on throughout the small but spacious shop located at the rear of his auto parts business on East Fourth street.

Gilliland's auto motor rebuilding shop does all custom-work on a time and material basis. Each piece of work is given a job ticket which is followed by a punched time clock mark during its travel about the six-room shop until completion. No two jobs of rebuilding are alike. Some run as low as $5 and some may cost more than a $1,000.

Just recently a San Francisco customer, who had "Gig" do his work for more than a quarter century, sent a $25 job - some small bushings he wanted worked over. This week a South Bend customer came into the shop for two Model T motors he had rebuilt. Do you recall the price of a "tin lizzie" 40 years ago? Well, the rebuilding of the motor block today would have paid for one in those days.

Gig's shop is equipped to handle anything in size from a one-lunger lawn mower motor to an eight-cylinder diesel. His is a diversified rebuilding shop, one of three in Indiana. Others are at Evansville and Gary, so equipped and as modern. Many of his customers also are in the rebuilding business but do not have as complete an operation as is Gilliland's.

Thus, from a start with an old "Fronty" in 1922-23, when he experimented with a racing car motor block rebuilding job, down through the antique car rebuilding craze of post World War 11 era, a hobby has become a lifetime's romance now in its 43rd year.

If the people only knew, says "Gig," a rebuilt motor will last three times as long as a new motor. Why? Because the reheating and tempering of metal is better.

HEADSTONE, NEW ONE

For "Uncle" Johnny Patton
The Sentinel, May 27, 1966

A new generation has paid its respects to "Uncle" Johnny Patton, a onetime slave who found a new life in Rochester almost a century ago.

The grave of John Patton has been provided with a new headstone through the efforts of the Rochester Lions Club and Warran Tatter of the Rochester Monument company.

The old stone on Patton's grave in the Citizens cemetery had been time-ravaged and damaged by vandals. The need for a new marker was brought to the club's attention by Mrs. Ray Myers.

Thus it is that the story of "Uncle" Johnny Patton is recalled to today's Rochester citizens.

He was a Negro, once a slave in the South. At the conclusion of the Civil War in 1865 he came to this city with some returning Union soldiers, now unidentified.

"Uncle" Johnny was quiet, reserved and genteel according to contemporary accounts. He settled in a frame dwelling in the southeast part of the city and soon ingratiated himself with the citizens.

He worked as a truck farmer, selling his vegetables door to door, and also did odd jobs for all who wished his servics.

Late in the century, one Silas Nye died and left his downtown peanut-popcorn stand without an operator. Local businessmen, all friends and admirers of "Uncle" Johnny bought the stand for him. For many years afterward, "Uncle" Johnny was a fixture in the popcorn wagon at the southwest corner of Main and Eighth streets.

When he died, on May 15, 1905, the townspeople provided him with a suitable funeral service and burial.

The recent renovation of the gravestone keeps green the memory of this quiet, humble man, who, once scorned as a slave, found friendship and dignity in the later years of his life.

GENEVA CENTER

Is Dedicated

The Sentinel, June 6, 1966

The Geneva Study and Camp Center of the Indiana Synod, United Presbyterian church which will draw hundreds of adults and young persons every year as the main conference center of the Synod, was dedicated here Saturday.

More than 150 persons attended the ceremonies at the new complex on the west side of U.S. 31 five miles north of Rochester in the Glaze Hill area.

The dedication came almost one year to the date after ground was broken on the 200-acre site June 25, 1965 and some seven years after it first was decided that a new Presbyterian conference center was needed.

The new facilities replace Camp Kosciusko at Winona Lake, which was put into operation almost 60 years ago and which became inadequate to the needs of the Indiana Synod.

The Geneva Center will be used year round for conferences and study groups, with activity swelling in the summer as youth camps are conducted.

Several meetings were conducted last month even before the official dedication.

The center has a large main building housing assembly and conference rooms, administration offices, sleeping quarters for staff, dining and kitchen facilities. North of the main structure is a swimming pool while to the west are summer cabins couched in a rolling, wooded area.

Work still remains to be done at the site especially landscaping and surfacing of driveway and parking areas. - - - - -

ELECTRIC SERVICE

Pioneer, O.D. Ross

The Sentinel, July 28, 1966

The history of electric service in Rochester began more than three-quarters of a century ago with the foresight and determination of one man.

In 1889 O.D. Ross pioneered the development of electricity in this community when he started his one-man power company. The first power plant to be built in Rochester was located on Race street. Although crude in comparison with today's complex generating and transmission systems this initial step opened the door to the energy of the future for the city's inhabitants.

With the rapid technological development of the electric industry, Rochester's first power plant was out-dated soon after it was built. In 1902, a new plant was constructed at Sixth and Madison streets on the same locaton of Public Service Indiana's new service center and headquarters building.

Four years later the power plant was organized under the name of the Rochester Electric Light, Heat and Power company. In addition to Ross, the owners at that time were J.E. Beyer, Chris Hoover, Mose Rosenbaum, Julius Silberberg, and Jacob Leiter. Beyer later became the sole owner.

In 1906, a major part of the electrical equipment - much of it purchased at the 1893 Chicago World's Fair - was discarded and new machinery installed. At first only the business district of Rochester had electricity. Carbon lights were used in business houses and for street lighting.

By 1909 the company was not only manufacturing electric light and power and furnishing steam heat for a number of business buildings and residences, it was also opeating a cold storage plant.

For heating purposes, steam was taken from the exhaust of the engines. When the exhaust steam was not sufficient for the work, live steam was introduced into the mains by an automatic regulating valve. When steam heat became unnecessay during the summer, the Rochester Light, Heat and Power company established an ice plant to make use of the excess steam.

From 1906 to 1910 the commercial offices of the utility were located on East Eighth street at the present location of the Rochester Farmers Mutual Insurance company. In 1910 the offices were moved to the present location of the Camblin building on West Nnth street. They remained there until 1924, when they were moved to the Times theater building at 622 Main street. The utility's commercial offices were located here for the next 42 years until June 24, 1966, when Public Service Indiana's new buildng was completed. - - - -

In 1912 there were magnetic luminous arc street lights in Rochester suspended only over the intersections of the principal street. Presently the city of Rochester has 332 street lights - 25 fluorescents, 66 mercury-vapor and 241 incandescent lights.

The Rochester Light, Heat & Power Company was purchased in 1922 by the Northern Indiana Power company. In 1941 the utility was purchased by Public Service Indiana.

Today Public Service Indiana serves over 6,000 customers in the Rochester District, with some 2,750 in the city of Rochester and Lake Manitou.

This district also serves the communities of Akron, Athens, Chili, Deedsville, Denver, Fulton, Gilead, Lucerne, Macy, Metea, Nyona Lake, Perrysburg, Royal Center, Tiosa and Twelve Mile. In addition over 850 customers in rural areas are served by the company.

ERIE RAILROAD

Phoebe Snow, Last Trip

The Sentinel, Nov. 28, 1966

Hammond, Ind. (AP) - The Phoebe Snow, a passenger train with a legacy of speed and comfort dating back more than 60 years, rolled through Decatur, Huntington, Rochester and Hammond this morning on the last lap of a trip to oblivion.

And so the crack train became a memory as it completed the westbound leg of its regular round trip between Chicago and Hoboken, N.J.

Some old friends of the Phoebe Snow were bitter.

Mrs. Albert Howe of Wellesville, N.Y., made the last eastward run Sunday night after boarding in Huntington, Ind. She said she was very unhappy about it because the railroads today are “interested only in the dollar, not interested in little people who don’t want to fly.”

Mrs. Howe, in her 70s, spent the holidays with a son, Dr. Fordyce L. Howe, in Fort Wayne.

Herbert Herendeen, general yardmaster at Huntington, said the train’s demise was “like losing an old friend.”

Erie Lackawanna railroad officials said the train was canceled because of rising costs and declining passengers.

The westbound Phoebe Snow was filled to capacity, an unusual sight in recent years. Railroad officials said many passengers apparently had chosen to make part or all of the trip out of feeling of nostalgia.

The Phoebe Snow name was coined to emphasize the cleanliness of the ride in the days when passengers commonly were begrimed with soot thrown back from soft-coal-burning engines.

The Phoebe Snow used hard anthracite coal, which produced little soot or smoke.

The train was discontinued during World War 1, when the government ordered that all locomotives use soft coal.

FULTON LIBRARY

New Location

The Sentinel, March 6, 1967

The Fulton branch of the Fulton County Library now is in its fourth location, a new 30-by-60-foot building that vastly increases its service potential to Fulton and Liberty township residents.

The new quarters, one block east of Main street, are observing the same hours as in the former location. An "open house" will be conducted later.

The new building has 3,600 square feet of space, compared to the 450 feet in the former space.

The Fulton branch was established in one room over Gilmore's grocery store in 1921.

A year or so later it moved into a building with the bank and the Post office - in the structure where the laundromat is now located. It was there when Mrs. Phylis Meyer became librarian on May 22, 1925.

In the late twenties, Mrs. Meyer said, the library moved to the building in which her father, L.W. Felder, opened a drug store in 1901. There it remained until last Feb. 10, when it moved to its new quarters.

Mrs. Meyer was born in Rochester but moved with the rest of the family to Fulton when her father started his drug store. In 1911 she married Charles Chance Meyer.

Mrs. Meyer graduated from Fulton high school when it was a three-year school and was in a building on the site which the Baptist church now occupies.

When Mrs. Meyer took over the library 42 years ago, she estimated the number of volumes at 2,000. It has doubled to about 4,000 volumes at the time the library moved to the present location. In the last three weeks, the number of volumes has about tripled and more are being added every week.

Mr. Meyer, a retired barber, and his wife donated the lot upon which the new library has been built. Mrs. Meyer is still libraria.

To Be Closed

The Sentinel, July 19, 1967

Notice that the postoffice at Disko would be closed Aug. 11 was received here today in letters written by U.S. Senators Vance Hartke and Birch Bayh following their receipt of official word from the U.S. Postoffice Department. The information was sent to Dale Welty, Fulton County Democratic chairman.

The postoffice, which has been in existence for 80 years, is located in the general store owned by Postmaster Frank Peters. He gave notice some time ago that he desired to retire on April 14 due to ill health. According to the letter from Howard R. Barker, deputy assistant Postmaster General, no one has made application for the position.

Disko is located in the corner of Fulton, Wabash and Miami counties. At present it serves four families through general delivery while 26 others have lock boxes rented. Nearby homes are served by a rural route out of Silver Lake. The nearest postoffice is at Akron, only five miles away.

Barker stated in his letter to the senators that business in the Disko postoffice has declined gradually for years and expenses of operation is greater than the income.

The carrier of the rural route out of Silver Lake, he says, will deliver and collect mail, and stamps, deliver and accept registered, certified, insured COD mail and provide money order service.

The route will be extended to provide service at all Disko postoffice patrons on the road in front of their homes. They will use "Rural Route 1, Silver Lake, Indiana, 46982" as their new postal address.

Barker emphasized the department will provide a comparable service to patrons of Disko by rural delivery service and realize a substantial savings at the same time.

GRASS CREEK

What is It's Future?

The Sentinel, July 22, 1967

Residents of Grass Creek in Wayne township at the southwest corner of Fulton county met Thursday to discuss the future of their community, but came to no definite conclusions.

The residents are concerned that their town will fall by the wayside because the old school building will be sold Aug. 5 and the general store already has closed.

Farmers unable to use the local elevator have to take their grain elsewhere, resulting in a 40 percent drop in tax income from stored grain the last four years.

Residents hope the school building can be put to good use after its sale, such as for a warehouse or as a business building.

Dean Neff, Inventor

The Sentinel, Aug. 17, 1967

Representatives of 16 northern Indiana cemeteries were in the city Wednesday to witness a day-long demonstration of a local man's invention of a special gravedigging machine.

Response to the performance was enthusiastic and may encourage the inventor, Dean Neff, to manufacture the machine for sale.

Neff, former farm implement dealer and postmaster here, spent the past two years designing and supervising the construction of a prototype of the machine.

It enables graves to be dug in a confined area, which often is necessary, and can dig an opening eight feet long in a space of 10 feet. Graves now either are dug by hand or with a back-hoe attached to tractor.

The machine is composed of a standard back-hoe on a special narrow three-wheeled base. The latter can be moved laterally to provide various widths of openings for the hoe.

Neff, longtime trustee of the IOOF cemetery here, said that he will make a decision soon concerning the manufacture of the machine.

HOWER REUN

Logansport Park

The Sentinel, Aug. 18, 1967

The 50th and last Hower reunion was held at Dykeman Park in Logansport on Sunday, Aug. 31, with 70 members attending.

The first Hower reunion was held at the home of Henry and Leah Hower in the Mount Olive community, south of Rochester, on Aug. 25, 1914, for the immediate family.

Henry Hower, who died in 1924 at the age of 87, was the son of John and Barbara Garman Hower. In 1844 he accompanied his parents, four brothers, and two sisters, overland by wagon from Stark county, O., to Huntington. There, they loaded their possessions on a barge and traveled the newly-opened Wabash and Erie Canal to Logansport.

Settling on a farm in the Bethel community, Mr. Hower was a blacksmith and farmer. They had two more children after moving to Indiana. Three sons, Levi, John and Absalom, served in the Civil War.

The second reunion welcomed all descendants of John and Barbara Hower. Families named Surface, Myers, and Pownall, were among them. Later, collateral relatives were added. It was an annual affair, held at various parks in the area each year except during World War 11.

The eldest member present at the 50th reunion was Mrs. Ida Downs, 90, Rochester. She is the only one of the eight children of Henry and Leah Hower living. Other older persons present were Mr.

& Mrs. Harry Wilson of Onward. Mrs. Flossie Bailey of Fulton and Mrs. Esie Southerton of Macy.

Mrs. Downs' twin brother passed away in 1946. The youngest brother, Samuel, of Fletcher's Lake community, lived until November, 1966. The other brothers and sisters were Mrs. Anna Williams of Macy, Mrs. Emma Enyart of Fulton, Charles Hower of Rochester, Josiah Hower of Fulton, and Mrs. Lydia Raymer Knight of Deedsville.

Mrs. Clark Bair served as president and Mrs. Downs as secretary and treasurer for the past several years.

Relatives attended from Naperville, Foosland, Bellflower, and Danville, IN.; Nadeau and Spaulding, Mich., and Wausau, Wis.

Letters were read from Mrs. Helen Hower Pawlick, of Mesa, Ariz.; and Mrs. Coda Hower Miller of Tucson, Ariz.

Cards were signed and mailed to those who were ill or unable to attend. They were Mrs. Pawlick and Mrs. Miller, Mr. Alpha Raymer of Missouri, and Mrs. Pearl Cover of Macy, who is a patient in a Peru nursing home.

After a fine dinner, much enjoyable reminiscing and visiting, the group was reluctant to disband without plans for another year.

DELONG HISTORY

By Alice Sprecher

The Sentinel, February 6, 1968

In 1882 the first railroad, the Erie, laid tracks east and west through the DeLong area. In 1883 the Pennsylvania railroad laid tracks north and south crossing the Erie line. A tower was built and a one room depot and later a pen and loading dock for stock. In the early days of the railroad there were gates on the crossing on Main Street. The gate keeper was an Irishman named Patrick Daley. The ladies of DeLong used to ride the hand cars on the railroad to Monterey to attend dances, courtesy of the section crew no doubt.

A village grew around the intersection of these railroads and was named Marshland. Benjamin F. Good was appointed the first postmaster on September 26, 1884. It was found that there was another town called Marshland so the name was changed to DeLong on February 20, 1894, being named after Mr. DeLong who was the first railroad agent.

The first store was owned by Frank Good. It was located southwest of the railroad intersection making it across the tracks from the depot on Main Street. The first postoffice was in this store.

Prior to 1896 children attended a one room log school on the Ellis property, one-half mile southeast of DeLong. Then a two room brick school was built in the town. This school was replaced in 1916 by a two-story brick school which was abandoned in 1945 when the new Leiters Ford School consolidated and took over the pupils. This 1916 building still stands unoccupied since that time.

The first houses in the village were one built by Isaac Gray and one built as a boarding house by a Mr. Munger on Indiana Street and one built by the Kelsey family.

A German Reform Church was built in 1887 and abandoned in 1926 and later torn down. The Methodist Church was built in 1893 and is still in use.

Later Frank Good built a bigger building to enlarge the store on Indiana Street. This store was owned by various people subsequently including a Mr. Euwart and a Mr. Young. Another store in the east part of town was also a meat market and was owned by Bill Richy who sold it to Lee Robinson and Tuck Hay. A hotel and saloon were on Main Street, the saloon being on the first floor and the hotel rooms upstairs. This building, long abandoned, was torn down in the 1940s.

The land where DeLong stands was originally owned by the John Mahler family who bought it from the government as homestead land and later sold a portion to the Kelsey family. The Mahlers were early pioneers of around 1836 or 1837.

Kings Lake is called Shadle Lake in the 1907 Standard Atlas of Fulton County.

John and Thomas King came to this area in 1884 having come from Ireland and living for a time in New York and Ohio prior to this. Thomas King purchased land south of Kings Lake.

Land southeast of Delong was purchased by John Ellis Jr., who came here from Ohio.

An early atlas shows a sulphur spring just southeast of Delong near the river but we can't find anyone who remembers it.

At the turn of the century Delong was a thriving village and if the items in the Rochester paper of those times are to be believed, an active social life was not lacking in the community. Delong has regressed and now in this year oif 1987 has but one small store which is also the postoffice. It stands on the site of the original store and postoffice. There is a conservation club building, one church and twenty-five occupied houses. Sometime in the 1940s the larger two room depot which had replaced the first small one was torn down. In the 1950s one Erie track was torn up and the tower and freight house torn down.

In early times in time of drought when the wells went dry, women would take their clothes down to Kings Lake, build a fire under a big iron kettle, and wash their clothes there where they had plenty of water.

Credit for data on Delong is given to:

KEWANNA

How It Was Named

The Sentinel, Nov. 11, 1968

HOW KEWANNA GOT ITS NAME

By Bromley Smith

When George Winter, an English artist who had moved to Logansport, wrote in his Journals on July 17, 1837 that he was going to a council at Lake Kee-waw-nay, he furnished the proof that a lake by that name was known to whites and Indians. The fact that all concerned could meet at a designated place is good evidence that the lake had been named at some early date. The name meant "Prairie Chicken," according to the translation made by J.P. Dunn in his True Tales, a name given probably because the lake resembled a bird of that species, or because many prairie chickens were found in the neighborhood. The name was a favorite with the Indians, for there is a Kewanee in Illinois, a Kewaunne in Wisconsin, and Kewaune in Winter added, that the site of the council was at a village of the same name on the shore of the lake. He is careful to state that it wasn't a large settlement, but that its dwellings were scattered among the trees. Among these was the octagonal bark wigwam of Chief Ogamaus and the well-built log cabin of Chieftess Massaw. On the floor of her cabin many slept, having come to the pow wow without tents teepees. Of the permanent residents in the village there must have been a considerable number, enough to warrant a graveyard on a ridge nearby, which has yielded numerous bones, beads and other relics. We are sure about the graveyard, for Winter described an Indian burial ceremony which he attended.

To this settlement on the shore of Lake Kee-waw-nay came the commissioners of the U.S. Government and the representatives of the Potawatomie Indians. Among the latter was a minor chief from the Eel River region by the name of Kee-waw-nay. Although he took no part in the transactions at the lake he was present a month later, August 19th, at Crooked Creek near Logansport, at which point the Indians reported the decisions of their tribes and gave their final assent to move from Indiana within a year. At this council Winter became so well acquainted with Chief Kee-waw-nay that he persuaded the chief to sit for his picture. The result shows the head and shoulders of an Indian, wearing his hair in bangs, revealing a long nose and high cheek bones. He was dressed, not as one might imagine in leather, but in a white collar with a black stock, in a blue jacket and a fluffy white shirt. Inasmuch as it hardly seems probable that the chief wore such fancy clothing out in the woods at Crooked Creek one may hazard that Winter drew the countenance at the council and painted the store-outfit on him at the studio.

Laying aside his brush Winter gave a verbal picture of Kee-waw-nay, in fact two pictures. In one the chief is "an old man of consideration among his people. . . . The citizens of Logansport . . . respected him for his many qualities of an attractive character." In the other he is described as a drunken savage, drowning his sorrows in firewater.

"Kee-waw-nay came into camp this evening from Logansport completely 'corned' and scarcely able to sit on horseback . . . He was so drunk that he seemed to be incapable of lighting his clay pipe, about two inches long. He made signs for me to do it. I made two or three efforts to scrape some of the coals into the bowl of the pipe, but the fire was so powerful that I burnt my hand in the unsuccessful attempt. Taking the pipe from me with a grunt of disapprobation and probably contempt at my seeming fear of being burnt, and without the power of standing still a moment in one place, he stooped down, and I thought he would pitch headlong into the fire, dashed his hand and pipe into the embers and lighted it without any indication of suffering. After this was accomplished he wanted to go to his wigwam, and catching hold of me made signs for me to lead him to it. . . .The old fellow grasped my hand and . . . by pulling and urging I managed to get him to his wigwam.”

To that picture of the drunken chief Winter added, “I have some fears of getting him to sit for me, as he has been drunk ever since I have been here.” Fortunately the artist caught him in a sober moment, with the result that we have the only picture of the chief. (See page 131 in the Journals.) It can be added to the other notables who sat before Winter, notables such as Frances Slocum, the white girl who was stolen in childhood from the Wyoming Valley near Wilkes Barre, Pennsylvania, and was discovered in her old age living here in Indiana as a chieftess.

Winter’s interest in Kee-waw-nay leads to an inquiry as to the importance of the chief. Had he done anything noteworthy? There is no record of him as a speaker in councils or as a warrior in battles. He is never mentioned in connection with Little Turtle or Tecumseh, the great leaders of the Indians. Although he was old enough to be among the Potawatomes who fought in the Battle of Tippecanoe in 1811, his name was never included in the stories told n after years by the participants. The Indians spoke about the leadership of Whiteloon, Stone-eater, and Winnamac, but never mentioned Kee-waw-nay. The most that can be said of him is, that he drew his share of the annuities paid by the United States Government in return for land purchased from the Indians. His X mark, according to The John Tipton Papers, appears as one of the thirty chiefs who acknowledged the receipt of bacon and flour in 1824. Although his residence was somewhere along the Eel River, he signed annuity receipts together with 18 other chiefs from the Wabash and Elkhart Potawatomes. That was in 1828, when the Government met the treaty obligations by forwarding to its agents silver dollars, cloth goods, salt, iron, tobacco, and steel. Word would be sent ahead setting a well-known distribution point at which the chiefs and their followers could assemble. The distribution point was generally at a trading post. There, the Indians exchanged their furs for whiskey. The result was a drunken orgy, such as Winter described in the case of Chief Kee-waw-nay. Besides cash from annuities the Indians could occasionally earn dollars from labor on the roads or canals. For instance, "Kewankna's labor gang of 23 persons was paid off in October, 1830," apparently for work on the Michigan Road. The most notable item involving Kee-waw-nay is the appearance of his name on a treaty made in 1832, in which three chiefs reserved for themselves eight sections of land. The Government agreed to make annual payments of $20,000 for twenty years, to distribute goods in the value of $30,000 in one year, and to pay the debts of the Indian amounting to $62,412. Sharing in this governmental shakedown were the hands of Kee-waw-nay, Nee-bosh, and O-kaw-wause, the chief who lived on the shore of the lake. The arrangement was temporary, for in 1836 these three chiefs ceded to the United States their reserved lands upon payment of $6,400. At the same time the chiefs agreed to move West within two years.

At this point in the story of Chief Kee-waw-nay we may say goodbye to him. On the fall of the year when Winter met him at the lake (1837) a small advanced party of eighty or ninety Indians was conducted west of the Mississippi. Among the number was Chief Kee-waw-nay. That is the last we hear of him. The full migration of the tribe occurred in the summer of 1838, at which time about a thousand Potawatomes, guarded by troops commanded by Col. Abel C. Pepper and General John Tipton, plodded across the prairies to their new home in Kansas.

Concerning this moving, forced migration, of the Potawatomes there have been some expressions of sorrow. The plight of the Indians, driven from their ancestral homes, herded by troops for seven or eight hundred miles, has caused sympathetic writers to forget that the natives had sided with the French and the British, that they had sold their lands and had agreed by treaty to move. Furthermore these Potawatomes were selling land from which they had driven the Illinois, Kickapoos, and Miamis. But when the moving day came they stubbornly refused to pull up stakes. It was necessary to round them up and then to guide them and feed them as they slowly tramped westward. Their hardships under military convoy can hardly be compared with those of the migrating pioneers - men, women and children, from the East who with incredible labor moved in and turned a wilderness inhabited by two thousand Indians into a civilized State, occupied by millions.

Having seen Chief Kee-waw-nay and his tribe on the way to the setting sun, we may now inquire whether he left behind him any traces of his existence in Indiana. Could it be that a lake and a town had obtained their names from him? As to the lake and the village on the shore there is no evidence that they were named after him, or he after either of them. It is not probable that the Indians named the lake after the chief, for they seldom named places after persons, but rather after resemblances. When exceptions are pointed out it may generally be averred that the whites did the naming. This would be true of Kokomo, named after a chief, Strawtown after Chief Straw, Anderson after a chief by that name, both of the latter being anglicised. None of these places were named by Indians.

In fact when the surveyors reached Lake Kee-waw-nay in 1831 they set down in their notes the "meanders of an unnamed lake." That note may mean that the surveyors did not meet anyone who could give a name to the lake. It did, however, have a name, for as already pointed out the Indians and government officials gathered for a council at a place known to both parties, a place named Lake Kee-waw-nay.

This lake in the post-glacial age must have been much larger than it is now, judging by the muck bottom soil that extends hereabouts for miles. Even in the days of the original survey and later, before drainage, it must have covered more ground than the present 202 acres, for John Stamm, the father of Jesse Stamm who now tills the ancestral farm bordering the lake, once rowed a boat to Kewanna. This feat does not mean that the lake at that time extended as far as the town, but that in times of high water the swale leading from Kewanna to the remains of the lake became navigable. Traces of the swale are still visible at the crossing of Road 17 over the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad.

The drainage of the swale, which turned it into farming lands, continued for several years and would have included the lake itself had it not been for the opposition of cottagers on its shores. In fact two attempts were made to blow up the dam at the outlet. Removal of the dam would have doomed the lake and would have extinguished the rail station, now called Bay, which is situated on or near the former village of Kee-waw-nay.

Returning from this digression we turn next to the other trace of Chief Kee-waw-nay, that is to the present town of Kewanna. Was the town named after the chief or after the lake? Research has not been able to settle the question definitely. The probabilities favor the lake, for the Chief did not live hereabouts, but on the Eel River; he had won no eminence as a warrior, nor as a treaty maker, nor as a speaker. He had migrated westward ten years before a petition for a post office was forwarded to Washington. Added to the disappearance of the chief was the elimination of Lake Kee-waw-nay from the map, for according to Winter when he made a second trip in 1844 he had difficulty in finding the lake because in some mysterious way it had become Bruce Lake, a name applied by someone in honor of the Bruce family which had settled by the lake. As to the petition for a post office it did not ask that an office be established at a place called Bruce but in a place called Kewanna. In accordance with the petition a post office was established on February 18, 1847. The name approved at Washington was Kewanna, the first postmaster being William M. Tygert, a general merchant.

Confusion arises at this point in the history because the town, or a town, had already been laid out or platted here under the name of "Pleasant Grove." The platting had been done by Eli A. and John Troutman in June, 1845, that is, a year and eight months before the postoffice was established. Of course, a town with two names was bound to get its correspondence and its commerce mixed, not only internally, but with other places. It was soon discovered that there was another Pleasant Grove in the state in Jasper County, and that the Kewanna in Indiana was often tangled with the Kewanee in Illinois.

Topping the confusion arising from the platted name and the post office was a tendency to call the village "Pinhook." No one living knows how the town got that name, but the tradition of it lasts to this day. It may have been due to a sharp bend in the road near the present "Curve-Inn Restaurant," or it may have been inspired by the rivalry of some neighboring establishment. It so happens that there have been four "Pinhooks" in the state - one in Wayne County which is included in the title of a book by Nellie D. Hubbard, Pinhook to Brazil; another in Lawrence County, with postoffice from 1852 to 1904; a third in LaPorte County, and a Pinhook Park in South Bend. In the latter the tag was applied to the village of Portage, at a bend in the St. Joseph River, by neighboring hamlets which were jealous of its property. The name has survived to this day in the present "Pinhook Park." How the term came to its offensive meaning, is not known; for according to the dictionary it simply means "a bent hook used in fishing." On the case up in LaPorte County there was such rivalry between Flood's Grove and New Durham that the former called the latter "Pinhook" supposing that to be a very scurrilous term. Whereupon New Durham dubbed Flood's Grove "Squat Ham." No matter how the term originated in Kewanna it has clung tenaciously to the memories of the elders and has been pinned on to the younger generation - a real tradition. Mr. John Loft, aged 81, relates that when he was a boy his folks would say "Let's hitch up and go down to "Pinhook." Whether the term was applied derisively is not known, but persons who now refer to it generally smile.

Inasmuch as the platted name of the village was "Pleasant Grove," naturally we would like to know why it was given that name and why it was afterwards abandoned. A walk through the town will reveal that it is situated on a slight elevation, one high enough to shed rainfall in several directions. On this elevation once grew many splendid oaks and other hardwoods among which the citizens gathered to re-create themselves. The remains of that noble forest are still evident in the huge stumps on Toner and Troutman streets. It was this wood, growing even on Main Street, that led the Troutmans to name the village "Pleasant Grove." But also, other towns had the same name, a circumstance that led to complications. There were in 1849 eleven localities using the word Pleasant, several of which were Pleasant Groves. One of these, on Nov. 11, 1842, was given a post office which drew mail to Jasper County that should have come to Fulton County. Nevertheless in spite of inconveniences this community clung to the name for twenty-five years.

The proof that the legal name of the town was "Pleasant Grove" although the post office was Kewanna, comes from abstracts of deeds, from Township Road Books, and from the Docket Book of Benneville Stamm, Justice of the Peace. From two of the abstracts possessed by Oscar Enyart and Luther Shoemaker, is the citation that on June 24, 1847, President John Tyler signed a deed for Eli Troutman's addition to the town of Pleasant Grove. Over amongst that entry is an abstract in John Parker's deed as follows: United States to John P. Tygart, dated September 2, 1847, for Lot 346 on the south side addition to the town of Kewanna. Further transfers in Parker's deed state that the lot was in Pleasant Grove. How could a lot be in two places at the same time? The only reasonable explanation is, that someone inadvertently substituted the post office name of Kewanna for the platted name of Pleasant Grove. There is a Warranty Deed dated January 1, 1874, which contains both names in one entry: "In the town of Kewanna, formerly known as the town of Pleasant Grove." For additional evidence one may open the Deed Books on file in Rochester.

Trying to settle the question right here we turn to the Library which fortunately possesses a Road Book of Union Township in the handwriting of Benneville Stamm, a former Road Commissioner. A petition dated February 16, 1855. Prayed for a change in the state road from Perrysburg, Miami Co., to Pleasant Grove. On April 11, 1857, an item reads: "Intersection of the State Road from Pleasant Grove to Mauler's Ford," May 2, 1857, "Beginning in the Public Road from Pleasant Grove leading to Bruce's Lake," Dec. 14, 1863. "To intersect the Winamac and Pleasant Grove road." The last item in the book, dated April 16, 1870, reads "That Elizabeth Williams be paid six dollars for a town lot in Pleasant Grove for a site to build a school house." Some research by a student of local education might locate that six dollar lot. At no entry in the Road Book does the word "Kewanna" appear.

In the Docket Book, however, also kept by Benneville Stamm, when he was Justice of the Peace, there is considerable confusion. For instance, in May and December, 1850, Stamm writes that suits were brought from "Pleasant Grove." He used a small "g", but in April he used "Pleasant Grove," with a capital "G". Then, as the years went by he grew careless, for suits came from "Grove" in 1855, '56 and '57. That is he whittled off the "Pleasant" part, just as people do now when they speak of going to "Logan." omitting the "sport," as useless or time consuming. Once or twice the pen of the Justice slipped (for suits came from Kewanna, Ia., (Feb and Oct, 1851) The book gives the details of suits brought from Aubbeenaubbee, Fulton, Logansport, Union Township, Rochester, Fulton County, and Lake. It is clear that many of the defendants and plaintiffs did not know exactly where they lived. In this account the names of persons who beat-up their wives and did not redeem their notes for $2.50 have been omitted, thereby preventing suits for libel by living descendants. The main problem has been the documentary proof that the town of "Pleasant Grove" once existed.

Having shown that the town was platted under the name of "Pleasant Grove," and had clung to that name for a generation, although the post office was Kewanna, we next inquire why the village changed its name. To answer that question the dormant members of aged citizens were awakened, but alas, the change occurred when they were children and as far as they were concerned their town had always been Kewanna. Appeals to the attic of the Court House in Rochester have been in vain.

In the absence of documentation, we fall back upon the theory of the Honorable Henry Barnhart, who wrote the History of Fulton County, which is the third volume of Logan Esarey's History of Indiana. Barnhart must have had the documents before him, for he quotes from them, at least in part. A movement was begun in the latter days of 1870 or early in 1871 for the incorporation of Pleasant Grove, but with its name changed to that of its post office Kewanna. A petition was circulated, which must have caused considerable discussion. Should the village drop the name by which it had been known for a quarter of a century and adopt that of its post office? And should it incorporate?

Enough names must have been signed to the petition to warrant action by the county auditor and by the county commissioners. These officers taking into consideration the petition, the territory involved, and legal details, issued an order for an election by qualified voters. The whole matter was duly advertised, as required by law. What was the will of the citizens of Pleasant Grove? Did any of them make speeches on the street corners or in the general store? No vibrations have survived.

At any rate on the advertised date, June 3, 1871, an election was held at which nineteen votes were cast, all marked "Yes." The small number of votes cast might be an indication of indifference, or of tacit consent or of tacit objection. There was a lack of enthusiasm which was displayed at Rochester, Fulton, and Akron when these towns applied for incorporation. No matter what may have been the cause of the small vote, the commissioners were satisfied that the election was legally conducted. Therefore on December 4, 1871, it was ordered that the town be "incorporated by the name and style aforesaid (Kewanna), and shall hereafter be judicially taken notice of without pleading or alleging the same."

Thus the former village of Pleasant Grove alias Pinhook, became the second incorporated town in Fulton County, its new name agreeing with that of the post office - Kewanna, the beautiful town of the "Prairie Chickens."

FIRST SCHOOL

In Rochester

The Sentinel, Nov. 13, 1968

FIRST SCHOOL BUILT 135 YEARS AGO

By Mrs. Helen Turner, High School Librarian

About 135 years ago, the first white settlers came to Fulton county. Before a year had passed, a school had been established with Jacob Bozarth as teacher. A little log cabin located near the present Jaycee park, 12th and Monroe streets, was the first school.

Other early schools met in the Courthouse, Presbyterian church, and the Odd Fellows hall. Many of the early teachers were ministers and only a few women's names appear in the lists of teachers in those early days.

For about 30 years there was only one teacher for the school but in 1862 a new four-room school was built at Pontiac and York streets and opened with William Hazleton as the first principal.

Early school histories give evidence that all was not calm and peaceful in the establishing of Fulton county's school system.

For example, the years 1865-66 are referred to as a 'time of riot and discord' in the school. One early scholar tells of becoming "an expert in throwing paper wads and doing other deviltry which gave the teachers an opportunity to develop the muscles in his good right arm."

Problems of a different type arose when the new school built in 1887 burned down before it could be occupied.

A lively contrast to the miniskirts of today is related in one early county history.

"It was very fashionable for the girls to wear hoops, the larger the better. I remember my sisters who went to school would sew tucks in their skirts and run grapevines through, making the skirts as large as desired. In our school we sat on benches, and it required a peculiar movement on the part of the girls to sit down just right, which I will not undertake to describe, but which I feel certain could not be accomplished by the belles of today without serious consequences."

The length of the school year in 1867 was 70 days, compared to our present school year of 177 days. For the 70-day session, the principal received $2.66-1/3 a day, the first assistant $2 a day, and teachers $1.33-1/3 a day. In 1868, wages had increased to $2 to $3.75 a day.

The first school house in Richland township was a log cabin given to the district by David Mow. The writing desk consisted of rough boards nailed around the sides of the school room. The seats were slabs "sawed by Young Ralston with an up-and-down saw."

Almost all the early accounts mention the spelling bees and spelling schools. At one contest in Union township, the two final contestants were faced with the word "Schenecdochee." The winner, Nelson Waymire, evidently had been doing his homework. - - - -

HUBERT'S SHOES

By Robert Truitt

The Sentinel, Nov. 25, 1968

Hubert Taylor, 609 Jefferson, has closed out a 51-year career in the shoe business in Rochester with the sale of Hubert's Shoes, 706 Main street.

Purchasers of the store are Mr. & Mrs. Robert Truitt of Rochester, owners of Truitt's Shoes, 726 Main street.

Truitt said there will be no immediate changes in operation or personnel of Hubert's Shoes, except that his wife, Dorothy, will become manager of the business.

Hubert's Shoes has been a Main street business fixture since 1931 when Taylor purchased the store from William Brinkman, Rochester's second mayor. There has been a shoe store at the site for some 60 years.

Taylor entered the shoe business in 1917 when he went to work for his grandfather, Sylvester Alspach, in the latter's store when it was located where the Deamer & Deamer real estate firm now is headquartered at 806 Main street.

Later, he was a clerk in the Hub Shoe Store, 725 Main street, when it was operated by his grandfather and his uncle, Guy Alspach, Hubert's brother, Orbra, also was a clerk in that store.

Six years after Hubert purchased Brinkman's business, Orbra purchased the Hub store and changed its name to Taylor's Shoes. The brothers operated their friendly competition until Feb. 1, 1966, when Orbra died. Taylor's Shoes was purchased by Robert Rowe of Huntington and was known as Brown and Rowe until last August, when the business was purchased by its manager, Mark A. Scheiber. He changed the name to Scheiber's Shoes.

Hubert Taylor said today he has no immediate plans but that he will maintain his residence in Rochester.

Mr. & Mrs. Truitt came to Rochester from Peru in August of 1961 when they purchased the quarters at 725 Main street formerly occupied by the Miller-Jones shoe store. They redecorated the entire business room of the store before opening it.

The Truitts, who reside on the east side of U.S. 31 just south of the Tippecanoe river bridge north of Rochester, have two daughters, Bobbie, now Mrs. Harry (Spike) Rockwell, and Sharon, 18.

HARVEY'S DIME STORE

Closing

The Sentinel, Dec. 27, 1968

Harvey's Dime Store, which has operated an outlet in Rochester for about 17 years, will close its store at 715 Main street, when the present stock has been sold, supervisor Bob Pfaff of Logansport said today.

The store has occupied its present quarters since 1956, moving from across the street after the building was remodeled following a fire in January of that year.

Previously, the store was at 704 Main street, which was occupied upon Harvey's move by Samuel Teitelbaum's clothing store. Teitelbaum closed his business in 1967 and the quarters were occupied in an expansion move by the Schultz Brothers variety store.

ATHENS HISTORY

By Helen Bryant Nichols

The Sentinel, January 16, 1969

Henry Hoover in the year 1837 brought his wife and family from Miami County, Ohio, to this part of Henry Township, that now comprises Athens and its vicinity, the Township bears his name being Henry in his honor.

Mr. Hoover had previously been in this part of Henry Township is clear by the entries in the land purchase book, in the County Court House in Rochester the County Seat, it shows that he purchased land from the government, which included the site of Millark, on September 6, 1836, and land to the amount of nearly 105 acres on December 1, 1836, at what is now the site of the present village of Athens. The location of this tract is about the northwest corner of the cross roads in the center of Athens, north and west to comprise a fraction less than 105 acres.

He returned the next year with his wife and family, and built a cabin on this land just north of where the Erie Railroad tracks are today. The Oliver Farm Equipment Company occupies land, which includes the site of the first cabin, and also the site a little to the north, where the so called Rooney House used to stand. This is the house Mr. Hoover built in 1870. This house was destroyed by fire a few years ago.

In the year 1840 Mr. Hoover built the mill at Millark, later destroyed by fire and rebuilt. He also about this time built, two miles to the East of Millark, a General Store for trade with the Indians. This store was on the south side of the trail, this Indian Trail started west of Lake Manitou. This trail, some places, roughly divided the Territory of the Potawatomi, and the Miami Indians, it seems they had no clearly defined line of separation.

The trail later became the old Wabash Road, which went out what is now Wabash Street to Rochester, to Mount Zion Mill, where the trail crossed the stream, and continued on to Millark, then to Hoover's Station or Trading Post, then on to Wabash by way of Gilead. The present road, much of the way follows the old Indian Trail, some places the road had been straightened to follow section lines. I believe at an early date a Wabash stage line followed this route.

The Hoover Trading Post was a community of the General Store, with the post office. A school was soon built to the east a short distance and on the south side of the trail, but when a new school was built, it was built on the north side and almost directly across from the earlier school. This was now called Pleasant Hill and just a little to the north, there is a little long forgotten cemetery, only one stone is left standing at this late date. A church was built to the east of the school and also called Pleasant Hill Church. This community is located a short distance over in Miami County.

I have described these places because their existence is directly due to the energy and ability of this early pioneer of this section of Henry Township, who helped in the clearing of this Virgin territory, from a wilderness inhabited by primitive Indians, to what it is today a prosperous rich farm community.

There are numerous entries in the land purchased book where Henry Hoover made purchases of various tracts of land in the area. Thus he was later able to sell to the many people who were now coming to this new land seeking homes. The land was covered with hardwood forests of oak, beech, walnut, hard maple and other valuable timber, which as the land was cleared sawmills were built in the various communities, one was at Millark and another was soon built at the crossing of the trails, which had now come to be called Hoover's Station. This land was filled with wild game and was dotted with small lakes and streams of clear water.

Some of the early settlers besides the Hoovers were the McIntires, the Bittles, the Moores, the Clevengers and the William Rannells and many others. The center of what later became the Athens Community was the so-called crossing of the trails, now the cross roads in the center of Athens. When the earliest families arrived there was a large circle of maple trees here. The Indians were said to have from earliest times used the space for their war dances and other ritualistic and ceremonial dances of the Potawatomi Tribe.

The Hoovers used to tell very interesting accounts of their Indian friends, and neighbors, how they used to visit them in their wigwams and of the friendship which existed between them, the Indians would show them how they raised their patches of corn and squash, and how they made their maple syrup and sugar. This community had at this time many sugar trees and some folks now remember the sugar camp which used to be just south of the picnic grounds. This was on the land first built on by William Rannells in 1837.

Mr. William Rannells was another of the early comers to this community, just twelve days after Henry Hoover bought land here. Mr. Rannells bought land from the government to the amount of 80 acres one-half mile south of the crossing of the trails, it was about one-half mile north of Beaver Creek. This land lay east of the trail going south, the next day, December 14th, he bought from the government, as the land purchase book shows 100 acres. This was about one-half mile east of the crossing of the trails and was located in the northeast corner of section 18, and now crossed by the Erie Railroad tracks and by State Road 14, and is bounded on the east by Road 700 East.

Mr. Rannells went back to Cory, Ohio, and returned early the next spring with his wife and family. His wife was Susan Rannells, his cousin, and they had originally come from Virginia and stopped for a few years in Ohio. Mrs. Rannells had a young colored girl who wanted to come with her young mistress, her name was Fannie Rose. She came with them to Indiana where she remained a faithful companion and servant until her death, which as the little headstone reads "died June 1, 1855, age about 42 years." She is buried in the Rannells private burial plot of what later became the Mount Hope Cemetery.

The Potawatomi Indians in 1838 were preparing to leave for their new home beyond the Mississippi River. The Rannells built a cabin on the 30 acre tract south of the crossing of the trails, but in a few years this was too small for their growing family and they began to plan a new home to be built on the land to the north and east. It was built some distance south of Chippewanuck Creek. Mr. Hoover had built a dam across the creek a short distance north of his cabin which formed a Mill Pond and now a saw mill was built. Mr. Rannells was able to get the lumber sawed for the new home at this Hoover Saw-mill, and by August 25, 1842 the new home was completed, and a beauty it was here in this new country of Indians. They had remembered the old home in Virginia and had now as near as possible re-created the old home in the new country. The house was a large two-story house facing west with a porch later covered with honeysuckle vines. I will let Dr. John E. Brackett describe a scene of long ago when he and a grandson visited his grandmother, his grandfather was now dead and lay buried in the little Rannells bural plot a little way to the north and west of the house. His own father was also buried here, he having died in 1847, Dr. Brackett, in the description of the house, had said it was painted white with green shutters.

This is as Dr. Brackett told it to Margaret Miller and recorded in Home Folks Vol. 11. "Grandma was seated complacently in an easy chair on the honeysuckle covered porch, and Fanny Rose peering over the gate, Grandma had risen to greet me holding out her soft white plump hand. I stooped over and kissed it, a ceremony she was very fond of and one I had been early taught by my Mother.

:"Why Grandma," I exclaimed. "What a beautiful dress you have on, and the new dainty lace cap is so becoming. I declare you look as if you had stepped off a Watteau fan. Every day you look more like Martha Washington." All this pleased her very much.

Mr. Rannells with his son had built a General Store in Rochester soon after the completion of the new house. He turned the management of the farm over to his son-in-law, Will Wood. Mr. Wood had married Nancy Rannells some time before this. Mr. Rannells was successful in his business and was elected to serve two terms in the State Legislature and after his death Nancy and her husband continued to operate the farm as long as Mr. Wood lived. He died in 1865. Mrs. Rannells had died in 1861. They are all buried in the Rannels private plot which as stated before was later incorporated in the Hoover or Mount Hope Cemetery.

It is believed that it was shortly after the death of Will Wood that the large home was turned into a Tavern or Inn. It served in this capacity for several years even for some years after the Erie Railroad was built in 1882. When the survey for the railroad was made it went right through the place where the home stood, and forced moving the buildings to a new location. The house was moved to the north and east, and it was turned around so it now faced the south. It had now lost much of its beauty and charm of its earlier days. The railroad was too close on the north and the road was much too close on the south. The Inn was known as Rannells house, after some years in the new location and need of a tavern was no longer felt. The Depot which had first been built across the tracks from the Inn was now moved down nearer the village. The house was now used as a farm home again. It is remembered also for the beauty of the interior, which was all finished in wild cherry and black walnut, with an open stairs with a curving banister, every room had a built-in wardrobe or cupboard.

Mr. Rannells had planted a large orchard along Chippewa-nuc creek, and in later years this orchard was known for miles around. A cider mill was built to the north of the Hoover Sawmill. It is recorded that on July 4th, 1865 James Kuffell and a friend were standing on the bridge below the dam, they had just stepped off the bridge when the dam gave way, and the water carried everything before it. The dam was never rebuilt, and nothing now remains of the creek as it has been drained to the north and this land is now all farm land.

The Athens community continued to grow, the Indians had been gone for several years, and white families continued to come seeking homes in this place of rich farm lands. Mr. Hoover was able to sell more and more of his vast holdings. He built a new home in 1870 just north of the first cabin. A new school had been built about a half mile to the east of the village. The first school was built about a half mile north and east of the Hoover Sawmill and probably the first teacher at this school was a Mr. James F. Wagoner, this was about the early eighteen fifties.

Reverend Richardson in 1876 held a revival meeting in the new brick school house, which was called Mount Hope School. There were several conversions made at this meeting and the need for a church building was felt. Reverend William Bass came to the community and organized a United Brethren Church group. They now began to plan a church building. The Rannells family deeded a plot of ground south of the Rannells burial ground to be used for a church building site. The church was completed in 1877, and was dedicated by Rev. Coverstone, who served as the first pastor. The first Trustees were Isaac Moore, Danial Cuffel, William Zellers, Ben Moore and Mark Bowen. The building was of brick and it served the community as a house of worship for fifty years. In 1927 it was decided to build a new church nearer the Village.

The railroad had been built through the village in 1882, which at this time was known as Hoover Station. The first passenger train from Huntington, Indiana to Chicago, Illinois went through the little station on April 2, 1883. The town now had a business district. A store building had been erected by Mr. Hoover on the northeast corner where the Farmarket plant is now located and the Barkman Brothers had a General Merchandise store across on the southwest side of the intersection. A cream station was soon built back of the Hoover building next to the tracks, which was later moved out to the front on the northwest corner and a blacksmith shop was in the rear of it and next to the track. There was at one time a shop north of the tracks.

Another early store building was built on the south side of the road it was on the east corner. This building was built by Nancy Wood, the widow of William Wood, who as we know was the daughter of William Rannells. This was a two-story building with the second floor occupied by the Macabees Lodge. The Gleaners also held their meetings here. The first store to occupy the lower floor was run by Mr. P.P. Kegg, the next owner was Francis Richardson, he then sold the business to Fred Rowe, who sold to Horace Eggleston. Mr. Eggleston died and Mr. Noah Shively married Mrs. Eggleston, they operated the business until 1931, when Mr. Edgar Stanton purchased the General Store, which now became known as the Stanton Store. Mr. & Mrs. Stanton operated the business and the post office for twenty years, when they discontinued the store which was soon torn down. Mr. Stanton built a smaller building a little way to the east where he continued to operate the post office for another two years when he retired and Mr. Cliff Alderfer, who had purchased the Russell Shipley store, took over the operation of the post office. Mr. Shipley, school teacher, had operated the store with the help of his wife. He retired from teaching and still lives in Athens.

The Shipley Store building had at one time been the home of the Whistler Buggy Repair and Paint Shop. Later Ray Newell had an auto accessory and Hardware Store in this building. It was after the railroad had established passenger service and was now carrying the mail the Post Office Department notified them that they must select a new name for the town, as there were already two other places called Hoover Station, one being the little Trading Post to the southeast and another was east of Logansport.

There had been a little village by the name of Grant just south of the Noftsgers corner two miles east of Hoovers Station. On the early morning of January 11, 1882, this tiny community ceased to exist as the Noftsgers General Store and Post Office was completely destroyed by fire. The entire contents of the store and postal supplies were completely destroyed. Later the Post Office Department notified Hoovers Station to select a new name they adopted the name of Grant their former sister community.

In the plat book in the county court house in Rochester the town of Grant was first platted July 29, 1889, a later addition was added in 1891. In 1908 the Kern Addition was added, by this time it was called Athens, which name it bears today. The name Athens was adopted at a meeting held in the Macabee Lodge Hall in 1897. At this meeting the two chief men in favor of the change were Oscar Johnson and Abe Hoover. After some discussion the motion was made to change the name to Athens, the motion was carried and the new name was adopted.

Mr. James Stinson had built a sawmill in 1880 and some time later sold it to Mr. William Sagers, who operated it for many years. There was also at this time a stave-mill near the sawmill, it was operated by a Mr. Pat Flannagan, this sawmill and stave factory were located on land later owned by Mr. John R. Barr and wife, and was located across on the south side of the road from the present Farmmarket plant. In the year 1915, Mr. & Mrs. Barr gave a plot of land located in the northwest corner and south of the highway to members of the Church of God on which to build a church building. A group of men got together and decided to purchase and tear down the Old Trinity Church or as it was commonly called Burns Chapel, which was located perhaps six miles northeast of the Village. This material was used in the building of the new Church of God.

Lloyd Bryant and Cecil Shoemaker and several others donated their labor and the building was soon ready for the first service. The first trustees were Daniel Wildermuh, Philip Bryant and Chester Morris. The first Pastor was Reverend H.M. Riggle. Rev. Ellis and Rev. Slaybaugh were other early pastors. Services were held here regularly until 1940, at which time the Athens congregation united with the Akron Church of God. The building was then purchased by Mr. Ernest Nichols, and the ground reverted back to Mr. Nichols as being the former owner, and is at this time owned by Mrs. Helen Nichols, wife of the deceased Ernest Nichols.

The Village continued to grow, with now a population of two hundred persons. The first depot had been built about 10 rods east of the Mount Hope Church at the cemetery, and on the north side of the tracks. It was later moved nearer the Village, and then later was moved to the rear of the Hoover store building where the Cream Station had been, which had now been moved out on the northwest corner. A long time station agent was Lou Moonshower, the telegraph operator was De Mattux.

The Hoover building was at an early date occupied by the Wesley Siekman General Store, later a butcher shop was located here.

This was run by Oliver Borden,. Vern Miller had a barber shop on the second floor. Dan Bryant was another early barber of Athens. Some of the early blacksmiths were George Sagers, Omer VanLou and Warren Heeter.

The Barkman Brothers store was located in the southwest corner, a large two-story building; this building it seems was first occupied by Otis Greeley who had a General Store here. It is remembered that at one time Wesley Heckman had a drug store on this corner. William Kern had for many years a General Store here he ran a huckster wagon through the surrounding countryside. It was in later years he managed the local pickle factory. Mr. Kern, a lifelong business man of Athens, was known ny all for miles around. He was known to all his many friends as Billy.

The first doctor was a Doctor Hill and then Dr. A.E. Stinson located here, his office was on the second floor of the Barkman Building. Doctor Stinson was the well known and well liked doctor and friend until his death in 1957. His wife, Grace, continued to live in the family home on Main Street until shortly before her death in 1968. Dr. Dean Siinson of Rochester, is their son. It was some time around 1914 that Mr. Ivan Pownell, Delta Winegardner and Jerome Hazelett had a blacksmith and repair shop in this Barkman Building before it was torn down and replaced with the present cement block building. The business started by these three men beame one if the earlier garages. They procured a 32-volt generator powered by a gasoline engine. Two houses were wired for electric lights, Delta Winegardners and Edward McGee's, later Ivan Pownell's house, the last house to the west of town on the south street was also wired, these were the first electric lights in Athens. These early pioneers in electric lighting strung wires acrss the street from their shop and lighted a croquet field with a light on a pole near the road, which served to somewhat light up a portion of the road, which was the first street light in Athens.

The Athens Elevator and livestock loading pens were where the Farmarket Plant is now located. The elevator was owned by Francis Heeter. It was destroyed by fire several years ago.

A new church was built after the old church by the cemetery had served the congregation and community for fifty years. On March 28, 1927 Mrs. Leo Streich bought and dedded a house and lot in Athens for a parsonage and adjoining lots for a church building. It was on July 24, 1927 the corner stone was laid under the supervision of the District Superintendent, Dr. J.H. Showers of Dayton, Ohio. The Rev.

J.D. Smith was the pastor during this period the church was being built, and the trustees at this time were Walter Rogers, Roscoe Burkett, D. A.E. Stinson, Amos Sanders, Jesse Burns and Ellis Riley.

Construction work on the new school was started in 1903, and was completed and ready for the classes in 1904. The first teachers were Blanch Swihart, Lillian Dawson and C.I. Clemens. The Athens School was consolidated with the Akron School in 1937. The building was demolished in 1940 and was still in very good condition.

Athens had a brass band in the early days of the century which gave concerts on Saturday nights in the center of Athens. It also formed a marching unit on the Fourth of July and on numerous other occasions when they had speakers and celebrations in the picnic grounds. The hall above the Stanton store was a place for community meetings, where plays were given and also other forms of entertainment were provided by local talent.

I must say a word about something that use to be an Athens institution, this was the annual Athens Sunday School Picnic. They were held in the grove across from where the new United Methodist Church stands. People would come from miles around to attend these picnics.

Athens today is a thriving little Village with a very interesting past and a bright future ahead as a growing community of suburban dwellers, many of them travel to surrounding towns and cities for their daily business and employment, but who enjoy the beauty and quiet as well as the friendliness of village life this community has to offer.

FULTON CO LBR CO

Removing Landmark

The Sentinel, February 25, 1969

One of the city's landmarks, the two story brick building on the northwest corner of East Eighth street and the Norfolk & Western railroad tracks - is yielding to progress this week.

The 65 year-old structure, perhaps better known as the home the Baileys constructed in the early 1900s, is being razed by its latest owners, Mr. & Mrs. Pete Terpstra, who purchased it last May from Fred M. Fraser of Rochester.

The lot will be graded and used by the Terpstras' Fulton County Lumber and Construction company.

The earliest reference in history books to the land occupied by the present building, shows that it was the site of the first cabin built in Rochester.

James Elliott and J.W. Shields, who came to this area in 1830 or 1831 from Jennings county, are listed as Rochester's first permanent settlers. Elliott built a cabin approximately where the present building stands.

Fraser, who purchased the property in May of 1951, looked up the abstract. Its first entry shows the land being owned by Christian and Margaret Hoover in 1877. Subsequent owners were Corn King Husker company (1902), Warren B. and Allie J. Martindale (1905) and Stilla P. and Essa Bailey (also 1905).

The Baileys constructed the present building in 1905. The abstract shows the following subsequent owners: Wirt M. and Elta B. Hazen, 1917; Rochester Lumber and Coal company, also 1917; Oren M. Hendrickon and J. Albert Herbster, 1925; Fulton County Lumber and Coal company, 1945; Fraser, and the Terpstras.

Stilla Bailey, who founded the present Bailey hardware business that now is located at 712-714 Main street, operated a lumber yard and planing mill in the Eighth street building. He went into the hardware business when he sold the building to the Hazens in 1917.

Vera Metz operated a restaurant in the building at one time; later opening the American restaurant where the Courthouse View restaurant is now at 719 Main street.

Another former occupant of the building was Newt Izzard, who had a cigar manufacturing business there.

Frazer had his DeKalb seed corn office in the building for more than 20 years, renting the building part of the time from the Fulton County Lumber and Coal company.

But perhaps best remembered by longtime residents of the community was the use of the building by Minnie Capp, who with her husband Harry operated a restaurant from about 1911 to 1922 or 1923 that catered both to townspeople and railroad travelers.

Carl Keel, office manager of Indiana Metal Products here, has vivid recollections of Minnie Capp's restaurant. His father, Charles, was cashier from 1896-1934 of the old Lake Erie and Western railroad depot across the street.

As a boy Carl had the job during summertime of carrying a big wooden box of food from the restaurant to the depot where the lunches were served to train passengers and crew.

Six LE&W trains came through Rochester Daily - three northbound and three southbound. One came near noon and another near suppertime. The conductor or brakeman would go through the train taking orders for meals. At Macy or Argos, he would telegraph to Rochester giving the number of meals needed. The food would be ready when the trains arrived here.

The meals would be distributed from the wooden box as the train continued to its destination. On the trip back, the box would be returned to the restaurant.

The Nickel Plate railroad merged with the LE&W in later years, and still later the N.P. became part of the Norfolk and Western system. Last October, the N&W station was closed and James Cummins, agent since 1957, went to the N&W depot at Plymouth to be agent for the Plymouth, Walkerton and Rochester areas.

The depot buildings at both Rochester and Walkerton are scheduled to be demolished in the future, Cummins said, removing the last evidence of the days when Minnie Capp's restaurant and the LE&W both were going strong.

Boone, the new owner, has been engaged in cattle feeding, hog raising and general farming near St. Anne, which is located near Kankakee, Ill. He and his wife, Darlynnne, are the parents of three children, Darla, 23, residing in Florida, and Linda, 22, and Danny, 17, both at home. The family will move to the city as soon as possible; the son remaining at St. Anne to complete his senior year in high school.

Newcomb said he has no immediate plans other than management of his farm interests in the county.

In the 25 years of Newcomb's ownership and operation of Fulton County Community Sale, the business has shown continued growth and popularity among consigners of cattle, hogs and sheep. This year it will reach almost $6 million in gross sales, making it one of the state's largest.

Sales are held each Saturday throughout the year unless Christmas falls on that day and will average 10 hours in length with some Saturdays extending 12 hours.

The number of consignors of livestock on sale day here range from 200 to 300 with 80-90 buyers purchasing animals. As many as 115 buyers have been recorded at a single sale.

Consignors and buyers at the Fulton County Community Sale represent a wide area of Indiana, involving 19 counties and 49 different communities. Patrons come to the city for the Saturday sales from as widely separated cities as Lowell, LaGrange, Rolling Prairie, Plainfield, Lafayette, Huntington, Michigan City, South Bend, Fort Wayne and Rensselaer, to name only a few.

Says Newcomb: "The general impression that sale barns are on the way out is not true here. We sold 333 more cattle and approximately 1,300 more hogs in the first 11 months of this year than we did for the same period in 1968. We are proud of the fact that our sale barn is one of the few whose volume continues to increase."

Fulton County Community Sale is the direct descendant of the first farm sale barn in Indiana, begun here over 50 years ago by the late Tom McMahan on a vacant lot where the postoffice now stands.

Newcomb bought the sale barn at its present location from the late Robert P. Moore, and on his first Saturday, Jan. 27, 1945, needed only about four hours to sell the livestock consigned for the day.

The firm employs 40 persons in various capacities of the operation.

CONSIDERED COMMENT

John Doe Honored

The Sentinel, March 9, 1970

We offer the following statement from The Post-Herald in Wyoming, Ill., because it says something that a lot of people are thinking these days out here in the land of the silent majority:

The time has come to proclaim another "day." I suggest we set aside a day to honor plain John Doe. The name refers to those - white, black or any other color - who have worked hard all their lives to gain the advantages and possessions they have, scrimping and saving to raise children and buy a home.

John Doe never has rioted, marched in protests, participated in strikes affecting the community welfare, and does not believe it is necessary to turn everything upside down to correct some of the obvious flaws in our society.

John Doe is the guy who still believes the Stars and Stripes are to be respected, and stand for the greatest country on earth - with the most opportunity for all who are willing to work hard for the opportunities and freedom it provides.

He is not whining and complaining because he is not handed a job he is not yet entitled to, or walking out in childish petulance because he is not given everything somebody urged him to demand.

John Doe is the one who sits in impotent resentment watching television interviews of every malcontent who thinks he has a grievance. There are no television interviews with John Doe to find out how he made the grade without violent confrontations and to find out how he thinks is right, rather than wrong, with the country.

Oddly enough, John Doe still believes our system of government can correct social problems without confronting his elected representatives with vociferous, unruly invasion of legislative sessions.

So let us give John Doe the recognition he deserves as the one who quietly works hard to pay for all the advances made by organized pressure groups at his expense.

He may be a square, but most substantial buildings are made from square blocks. - - - -
